The Charles and Louise Tilly Fund for Social Science History is sponsored by the Social Science Research Council. It celebrates the contributions of Charles Tilly and Louise Tilly. At the core of their life's work was a deep commitment to the powerless, the dispossessed and the marginalized, and a desire to discover how inequity can be overcome. Their joint work on collective action and revolution--along with Chuck's work on states, violence, democracy and method, and Louise's work on gender, class, family, work and industrialization--set a standard to which scholars will continue to aspire for a long time to come.

In addition to superlative scholarship, Chuck and Louise enriched the field with their immense intellectual curiosity, generosity, and individual charisma. They had a direct and lasting impact on the work of other scholars, and countless students looked up to them as a source of inspiration and guidance. Charles (Chuck) Tilly and Louise Tilly were key figures in establishing social science history as a field and in defining how it should be practiced. Their work exemplified the best interdisciplinary scholarship--one that rests on a foundation of solid theory, employs sophisticated qualitative and quantitative historical methods, and is centrally concerned with enduring social issues.

The Charles Tilly and Louise Tilly Fund for Social Science History will support graduate students from a variety of disciplines doing historical social science research, particularly those engaged with the broad themes addressed by Charles Tilly and Louise Tilly.
